Best I've Ever Seen or Heard

Talking with artists about concerts or albums they'll always treasure

I went to Infinity Hall in Norfolk, Connecticut, last fall to see two top veteran songwriters, Gretchen Peters and Mary Gauthier. I headed home after the show, though, knowing I had seen a great performance by three top songwriters. Peters and Gauthier had shared the stage equally with an unbilled, less-known talent, Jaimee Harris.

"I believe that Mary and Gretchen are two of the most important songwriters of our time," Harris tells me. "They continue to capture our time with incredible narrative. To share my songs on the same stage with these songwriters is pretty mind-blowing. The opportunity to learn firsthand from their experience, musicality and craft is extremely precious. I feel honored to have the opportunity to study in their tradition. Each show has strengthened my confidence as a songwriter and background vocalist."

That's too modest, because Harris stands on her own as a singer, and she has already written some classic songs.

Peters, who just released an excellent new album, The Night You Wrote That Song: The Songs of Mickey Newbury, relates to me the time she first discovered Harris's artistry.

"I met Jaimee when she attended a songwriting workshop I was co-teaching with Eliza Gilkyson and Mary Gauthier," Peters says. "She knocked me out with her songs, particularly one she wrote during the workshop, 'On The Surface.' We've played numerous shows together since then, often with Mary Gauthier. She's a truly original singer and songwriter. She's quite open about her influences, but her songs and her sound are all her own."

Harris, who lives in Austin and is Gauthier's girlfriend, learned about Peters's music from her late mentor, Jimmy LaFave.

"I began playing Revival (Peters's 2010 album) at a weekly gospel brunch I'd attend every week at Strange Brew (an Austin coffee shop and live music venue)," Harris says. "It wasn't until later that I realized so many of Gretchen's songs, including 'Independence Day' and 'You Don't Even Know Who I Am,' were some of the first songs I learned when I was just beginning to play. Without my awareness, Gretchen's songs informed so many of my sensibilities as a songwriter."

Harris later became familiar with Gauthier's music through a Ray Wylie Hubbard song called "Name Droppin'." The song's fourth verse contains the lyrics: "Mary Gauthier, Mary Gauthier / She write all night, sleep all day / Damndest thing I ever seen / Was that woman in a limousine!"

Like Gauthier and Peters, Harris has worked hard at her songwriting craft. It took her 12 years to make her first album, Red Rescue, and it's packed with top-notch songs, including "Catch It Now" and the title cut. LaFave sings on the title cut, and two other songs on the album, "Forever" and "Where Are You Now," appear to have LaFave and bassist George Reiff in mind. Reiff was a friend of Craig Ross, the album's producer, and he and LaFave died on the same day.

Harris befriended LaFave while singing backup vocals on his album, The Night Tribe, five years ago. But she knew LaFave's music long before.

"My dad turned me onto 'Never is a Moment' (a song on LaFave's 2001 Texoma album), and I learned how to play it on guitar in my childhood bedroom," Harris says. "I fell in love with all of Jimmy's records shortly after that time. Jimmy's voice — the emotion wrapped up in it — and his phrasing just floored me. I also loved how he played guitar. So much of his vocal and guitar sensibilities have found their way into my writing for years."

Harris says she saw LaFave perform several times over the years, and she joined him at his final show in Austin in 2017.

"I was just a fan," she admits. "I actually had tickets to see him on a Friday night at Strange Brew, and the Sunday before, my friend Noelle Hampton recommended me as a third background singer for The Night Tribe."

LaFave trusted the recommendations of Hampton and Betty-Soo, and Harris met him in a recording studio.

"It's not every day you get called to sing harmonies on one of your hero's records, so I was obviously a little nervous — especially because Jimmy had never heard me sing," Harris says. "At some point in the session, it was revealed that I was also a songwriter. Jimmy told me he'd come check out my band — and he did! He taught me quite a bit about Woody Guthrie and all sorts of Oklahoma songwriters I was unaware of at the time."

Harris, who was born in Nacogdoches, Texas, and grew up in Waco, says LaFave connected her to Peters, Eliza Gilkyson and Gauthier. "All three women offered to step in after Jimmy's passing to answer questions, guide and support me," she says. "I'm so grateful."

Harris says she misses LaFave every day.

“I really hope I’m making him proud,” she says. “I’d give anything to talk to him one more time — to hear his laugh or one of his questionable jokes. There are still times in my life when I reach for the phone, because I need his wisdom.”

Another major influence seems to radiate throughout Red Rescue. I mention to Harris that the sound and vibe often bring Stevie Nicks and Fleetwood Mac to mind.

“Craig, my band members and I share a serious love for Fleetwood Mac,” she responds. “I saw Fleetwood Mac’s The Dance (the group’s 1997 concert recorded for MTV) when I was 7 and had been playing guitar for two years. The Dance pretty much sealed the deal with this whole music career thing. I didn’t care if I was Lindsey (Buckingham) or Stevie, but I knew I had to dedicate my life to playing music.”

Harris says it’s “so compelling” to hear the many voices in Fleetwood Mac “harmonizing or weaving in and out of each other.

“I loved the songs, the energy of the band, Lindsey’s simple but effective guitar parts,” she says. “Also, as a singer who mainly likes to operate in my lower range, I find so much inspiration in Stevie’s voice. Live, three-part harmony is a huge part of our show — much more than you hear on Red Rescue. Craig pulled the less obvious Fleetwood Mac influences on the record. Instead of lots of harmony, he played beautiful 12-string guitar. I think that’s one of the genius moves of his production. When you listen to Red Rescue, there’s a familiar experience of listening to (Fleetwood Mac’s) Rumors without being too derivative.”

I ask Harris which three to five albums stand out as the best ones she has listened to.

“I don’t believe there is such a thing as a best album,” she responds. “I love various albums at different times for a variety of reasons. I learned every song on Tracy Chapman’s debut record when I was 8. Hal Ketchum’s Greatest Hits remains one of my favorites. I just love all of those songs and the production.”

Then Harris lists a string of favorite albums: LaFave’s Blue Nightfall, Cimarron Manifesto and Depending on the Distance, and Emmylou Harris’s “masterpiece,” Wrecking Ball.

“Eliza Gilkyson’s Hard Times in Babylon,” Harris adds, “has received the most play in my car over the past four or five years. Patty Griffin’s 1000 Kisses and Living with Ghosts are masterpieces, and I have learned every song on every Dixie Chicks album. Mary Gauthier’s Trouble and Love was on constant repeat for me for a while. I also believe her Rifles & Rosary Beads is one the most important albums of all time. I could go on and on.”

Reviews

I have the unfortunate habit of frittering away my time reading crime novels and watching movies in addition to making art and publishing Acoustic Live, so I have not watched the volume of live-streams that others have. However, there are some I try to never miss, and some new viewings which bear mentioning.

Suzie on Sundays with Susan Werner is a continuous delight. Susan is a consummate musician with a rapier wit and a stylistic range that most singer/songwriters never approach. I found myself thinking, "If I had that level of talent, I'm afraid I would be so unbearably egotistical that other musicians couldn't get away from me fast enough." Susan, however, interacts with every guest with a natural ease that allows for an interweaving of personality and style; and it's all done with off-the-cuff humor. Susan's compositions can be biting, wickedly humorous or heartbreaking. Using both piano and guitar, she handles contemporary folk to the American Songbook and everything in between with fluid grace. She's beautiful inside and out. It's been over 20 years since I first saw her and I'm still awestruck.

I like to refer Todd Snider's What it Is, held at noon on Sundays, as the "Church of Todd." I attend every week. One Sunday, ignoring the red "Beware" flag in my brain that precedes any of my attempts at humor, I posted in the comments stream: "I used to worship at the tabernacle of Steve Earle. I have now accepted Todd Snider as my personal savior." One other commenter responded: "Amen." Todd is a Mark Twain-like humorist and a debunker of conventional thought. He tells wide-ranging stories every week, some dealing with what the average mind might call "miscreant activities," — as in the ones that landed him in jail. On May 24th, he jokingly stated that he'd boxed Roberto Duran and got his ass kicked. He confessed his tall tale and gave props to fellow Nashville singer/songwriter, Paul Thorn, who actually did fight Duran (the video shows), going six rounds, until his corner stopped the fight because of numerous sustained cuts. Todd expressed amazement — "That hardly seems fair" — at how good Paul sings — that he was able to have been that wiry, fearless, 22-year-old fighter, to have then turned into a really good singer/songwriter. A further check online brought me to a tongue-in-cheek performance of Paul singing "It's a Great Day" wherein certain obnoxious types take a butt-whipping (from Paul, of course). Another video shows Paul humorously expounding in a song about viagra. There's lots to be learned on the "interweb," and nice portion of it is from What it Is.

Scott Wolfson does not do a stream per week, but when he does (with the Other Heroes), you'd better be there. The most recent one included a parody of TV tropes — announcements and ads and a (probably prerecorded) performance with the entire band in separate screen splices. Scott and sideman extraordinaire/drummer Chris Kelly (on lead acoustic guitar) performed together in one location. A tip of the hat, Sir Scott!

Jonathan Byrd and the Pickup Cowboys continue to amaze me each week with the level of excellence, both in their musicianship and quality of their livestream. They've been doing this more than two years now and have reached a level that few can match (although there are some solid efforts out there). Before the pandemic, they'd stream during their live in-residency show at the Kraken roadhouse in Chapel Hill, North Carolina before a live audience. In some archived shows, the viewer can hear the audience singing along, for example, to their a cappella, handclapping gospel rave-up: "Poor Johnny at the bottom of the lake / The boy went fishin' and drowned" The trusting trio still performs their Shake Sugaree Americana Residency together, live from the stage at the now (nearly) empty roadhouse. Masked staffers moving about the room provide a changing viewpoint using handheld iPhones. Each week the band launches from a song into an extended jam, showcasing solos on drums by Austin McCall and ZZ Top-esque guitar by Johnny Waken (he also provides saw and mandolin backup). Jon's songwriting has always contained the essence of the bedrock of living on planet earth. During the most recent episode I watched, May 27th, Jonathan took a brief interlude to express his grief over the death of George Floyd at the hands of Minneapolis police. His statement, written that morning — "Because I didn't know what else to do," he said — with its recurring phrase, "I can't breathe" was heartwrenching. For some, the bedrock of living has been habitually denied. It left me on the verge of tears. The reading was followed with a minute of silence.

I find myself wondering, at times how he manages to keep the trio together — Austin McCall and Johnny Waken have to be hot properties. It works both ways. Jonathan Byrd, in highest praise, is a monster, an absolute beast. I'm guessing that working with him is a powerful draw and they're happy as clams. At this point in time, I'd rate Shake Sugaree Americana Residency as the best live-streaming show available.

The Folk Alliance International Livestream Concert Calendar has provided me with a chance to discover acts new to me. One of those I recently viewed, Violet Bell, Lizzy Ross and Omar Ruiz-Lopez, was an eye-opener. They do a Livestream Lunch every Thursday at noon. Lizzy is an expressive singer/songwriter vocalist who could ply her trade in the jazz market if she so chose. Omar's vocal and violin backup provide a wide color palette. His instrumental prowess extends to viola, cello, guitar, mandolin and banjo as well. He's more aligned with the music now, he's said, as opposed to his many years as a busy sideman. For me, Violet Bell is a keeper, a previously undiscovered gem.

One upcoming concert worthy of mention is actually a 2019 replay slated for Sunday, June 7th at 4pm — Mara Levine's CD release show with Gathering Time. Mara's transcendently beautiful vocals are rock-solid and laser clear, a living testament to folk tradition. We hope readers will gather together, support this show and reward Mara for her talent and the support she's given this community for so many years.
